

The editor I used in this project was Brackets, I found it a really good experience to use. Most of the code that I typed up flowed nice with it. One thing I would like to change is the ability to highlight a group of text and be able to drag and drop it wherever I please. Right now the only way to move text is to copy and paste it, to me its just too much of a hassle to keep doing that. The browsers with which I tested on consisted of Safari and Google Chrome. The standard for my HTML5 is current. I was having a lot of trouble with the centering aspect of pictures and lists and such. Another difficulty for me was the buttons on my home page, I wanted to make it so if you click any part of the button it will go to the link. The other option was to have a nice looking button but you could only click the text, which seemed very primitive to me. I spent about 3 hours on those stupid buttons getting them just the way I wanted. All the pictures I used in my website belong to me and only me. I took both background images and the two images on my résumé. The other thing that was new to me was switching back and forth between the CSS document and the HTML document.
